

About the Authors

Jaynanne Calaway ('99) is an economics and international studies double major. Jaynanne wrote "The Effects of Statutory Minimum Wages on Employment" while studying at Pembroke College in Oxford, England. After graduation, she would like to continue her economics education with graduate school.

Michael Cornstubble ('97) was an economics and business administration double major with a minor in Spanish. Michael wrote "Japanese U.S. Auto Transplant Production" and then continued working on this project for research honors. Michael is currently a pharmaceutical sales representative for Eli Lilly and Co.

Sean Hantak ('98) is a Spanish and international studies double major with an economics minor. Sean wrote "The EU 6 or the EU 15+?" for Dr. Lowry's International Finance course. He became interested in the European Union after attending a seminar held by the European Commission on the "Economic and Monetary Union and International Financial movements" while studying abroad in Spain. Sean has received a Bundestag-Congress Scholarship from the U.S. and German governments. So, after graduation he will be spending a year studying in Germany.

Patrick Holly, Jr. ('99) is an economics and business administration double major. Patrick wrote "Politics, Economics and the European Union" for Dr. Lowry's International Finance course. After graduation, Patrick would like to work in the banking and investment field.

Tony Johnson ('98) is a public accounting major with an economics minor. Tony wrote "The Winds of Change: China's Growing Economy" with Jennifer Van Dyke for Transitioning Economies with Dr. Seeborg and Dr. Ling. After graduation, Tony will be working as an auditor for Arthur Andersen.

Alexander Kons ('00) is an economics major with a history minor. Alexander wrote "Ethnic Specialization of Travel Agencies" for Dr. Lowry's Microeconomics course. After graduation, he would like to become an airline pilot.

Tom Purl ('99) is an international business major with a Japanese minor. Tom wrote "The European Union Monetary Integration" for Dr. Lowry's International Finance course. After graduation, Tom would like to apply his business knowledge by working in the consulting or finance area.

Anjali Shah ('98) is an economics major with a Spanish minor. Anjali wrote "Familial Influences and Higher Education" for her senior project. After graduation, she hopes to find a job related to her field of study. She is also considering studying for the CPA.

Jennifer Van Dyke ('99) is an economics and business administration double major with a minor in math. Jennifer wrote "The Winds of Change: China's Growing Economy" with Tony Johnson for Transitioning Economies with Dr. Seeborg and Dr. Ling. After graduation, Jennifer hopes to continue her education in economics with graduate school and one day teach economics at a Liberal Arts School like IWU.