

English

To study English literature and language is to understand its power, its possibilities and its pleasures. As an English major at Illinois Wesleyan, you'll examine writing past and present to discover its variety and complexity. You'll learn to write with clarity and imagination.

Why English at Illinois Wesleyan?

- Our English program offers two tracks for majors: a concentration in literature and a concentration in writing.
- The literature track focuses on reading, research, critical analysis and speaking skills.
- The writing track links the study of literature to an emphasis on creative writing and journalism, with courses in writing fiction, poetry, the essay, news and news features.
- Opportunities for research and independent study are available and encouraged for qualified students in both the writing and literature concentrations.
- The student-run literary cooperative Tributaries and the campus chapter of the national English honors society Sigma Tau Delta foster a sense of community within and beyond our campus.
- The Department encourages students to broaden their experiences by studying abroad for a semester or during May Term.

Learning from a Quality Faculty

Faculty in the English Department put teaching first. Five of our nine full-time faculty have received the University's highest teaching award, and another was named Student Senate Professor of the Year.

- Kathleen O'Gorman, Department Chair, Professor of English, Ph.D. — University of Notre Dame
Her research interests are Samuel Beckett, James Joyce, Julio Cortázar, feminist theory, twentieth century women writers (Luisa Valenzuela, Clarice Lispector, Fay Weldon, etc.) and representations of the female in literature.
- Mary Ann Bushman, Associate Professor of English, Ph.D. — University of California-Berkeley
Her research interests are Shakespeare, adaptations of Shakespeare's work, the pedagogy of teaching Shakespeare, Renaissance poetry and drama and feminist theory. She currently directs IWU's Writing Program.
- Wes Chapman, Associate Professor of English, Ph.D. — Cornell University
He teaches courses in literary theory, British and American poetry, modernism, postmodernism, and science fiction. His current research interest is in cognitive approaches to literature.

A Sampling of Courses Offered by the English Department:

Writing Fiction
Writing Poetry
Creative Non-Fiction
Newswriting and Reporting
Seminar in Journalism: Public Relations
Science Fiction
Travellers and Travel Liars
Bad Girls
Poetry Through Performance
On the Bus: The Beat Writers
American Drama: 1940 - Present
Writing in the Third World
Freaks!
Medieval Literature
Romantic Literature
Slavery and the American Novel
Modernism
Literary Theories
Shakespeare's Comedies and Histories
Shakespeare's Tragedies and Romances
James Joyce
Senior Seminar

Recent May Term Courses Related to English:

Exit, Pursued by a Bear
Intricate Enchantment: On Science in Literature
Survey of English Poems, 1500-1700

“ Although most students who become English majors do so because they love to read and to write, they are also preparing themselves for life after

- Joanne Diaz, Assistant Professor of English, Ph.D. — Northwestern University
A recipient of an NEA grant for poetry, she teaches poetry writing and is researching expressions of religious, political and romantic complaint in the English Renaissance.
- James Plath, Professor of English, Ph.D. — University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee
With a background in journalism and literature, he is a member of the Online Film Critics Society and remains active in Hemingway and Updike scholarship. He is faculty advisor to The Argus, IWU's student-run newspaper.
- Molly Robey, Assistant Professor of English, Ph.D. — Rice University
A specialist in nineteenth-century American literature and culture, her research interests include transnationalism, religion, domesticity, and the legacies of slavery. Her courses introduce students to literary history through material culture and digital archives.
- Alison Sainsbury, Associate Professor of English, Ph.D. — Cornell University
Her NEH-sponsored summer research seminar in post-apartheid South Africa yielded contracts that brought South African writers to Illinois Wesleyan for class visits and campus lectures.
- Dan Terkla, Professor of English, Ph.D. — University of Southern California
He is the most recent recipient of the University's teaching award. His research on the literature, art, architecture, and maps of the Middle Ages at places like Oxford's Bodleian Library enhances his medieval studies courses and has resulted in student research conference presentations and the awards of research honors.
- Mike Theune, Associate Professor of English, Ph.D. — University of Houston
An accomplished poet, his work with students has enabled them to publish their poetry in McSweeney's Quarterly and The Madison Review.

Putting Learning into Practice

- Students can join the staff of The Argus (one of the top small college newspapers in Illinois) or work for the campus literary magazine, Tributaries; the radio station, WESN 88.1 FM; the television station, Titan TV; or the Undergraduate Review, a student publication featuring student research.
- Opportunities for internships are available at places like IWU's public relations office, local TV and radio stations, and public relations or communications departments at State Farm and COUNTRY Financial.
- Tongue & Ink, which is a two-day conference designed especially for undergraduate writers, is an opportunity for students to share work with each other and with students from other universities, talk to professionals, try some new approaches and meet other writers.
- Our alumni include journalists for metropolitan newspapers; public relations specialists in all fields; editors at university and commercial presses; attorneys; freelance writers; online critics; public and private high school teachers; college professors; librarians; and entrepreneurs who have used their public relations and communications skills to promote their businesses.

college. Most obviously, they learn to write well, an essential ability in any professional career and an increasing rare and prized commodity. And because fiction and poetry and drama, the materials we work with, are complex and messy, like life, English majors learn to use their whole minds: the analytic intelligence to be sure, but also intuition, emotion, and imagination. The world changes so quickly that few people can really know what their futures hold, but it's a pretty safe bet that writing well and thinking well will be keys to any successful career."

Dr. Kathleen O'Gorman
Department Chair

ILLINOIS WESLEYAN
UNIVERSITY

For Further Information, Write or Call:

Dr. Kathleen O'Gorman
Department Chair, English
Illinois Wesleyan University
P.O. Box 2900
Bloomington, Illinois 61702-2900

Phone: 309/556-3242
Fax: 309/556-3545
kogorman@iwu.edu

iwu.edu/english