* Reproduction is defined as the making of copies of all or part of an item in the unit being described. It does not involve other uses, such as publication, public viewing, broadcast, and so on. While copyright legislation may place statutory restrictions on reproduction (as well as other uses), reproduction may be restricted for other reasons, such as the wishes of the donor, physical condition, and so on.

The archives staff will assist researchers in determining if copyright restrictions apply, although responsibility for copyright and obtaining necessary permissions rests with the researcher. Supplying a copy of archives & special collections material is not authorization to publish.

 Uses may include, but are not limited to: website, publication (magazine/journal/book), mobile app, exhibition and/or public display, film and/or video, or e-book. Patrons are required to describe their intended uses on our licensing form.

 We reserve the right to deny requests for copying media in their entirety for any reason whatsoever. Audio/Video files that cannot be duplicated in their entirety will be accessible as streaming files so that segments may be selected. Once the patron makes selections, the archivist will provide segment(s) in .wav or .mp4 format. Labor fees may be assessed for requests taking longer than one hour to prepare and licensing fees may apply. Patrons are required to describe their intended uses on our licensing form.
