

Anthony Romanelli's Bio:

Hi! My name is Anthony Romanelli (he/him/his). I'm a junior studying history at Illinois Wesleyan. I love reading about history in my spare time, as well as creative writing.

My tutoring philosophy is to help writers find the answers to their own questions, so that they can learn the skills to get the result they want out of their writing. I enjoy working on assignments that involve research presented in a persuasive/ creative way. I also like essays and creative writing.

My process is fairly straightforward to explain. Firstly, I read through papers quietly, but not silently. This is so I can catch errors I may not have noticed just reading silently. After reading, I prefer to have an active conversation about what concerns writers may have. I also want to get a feel for the writer's process; everyone has their own style, and I want to be sure I respect that, and that you feel respected. I also always make room to point out positives in papers alongside my constructive criticism, which I think is important for you so you know what your strengths are.

I think the most important thing to me is that writers leave the writing center feeling like they've gotten closer to their goal, and that they have the tools and support they need to push through and achieve it.

I'm familiar with APA, MLA, and Chicago/Turabian citation styles. I have written work for the following professors: Coles, Cutter, Kelahan, Dixon-Montgomery, Erlewine, Springwood, Perez, Reissenweber, A. Schultz, and R. Schultz.
